

A Non-Surgical Method To Increase Breast Size

(NAPSA)—A medical breakthrough is allowing women to add fullness and a modest size increase to their breasts without surgery. Research indicates that approximately 16 million women in the U.S. between the ages of 18 and 49 report they are dissatisfied with their breasts. Yet, less than one percent each year undergo surgery to increase their breast size.

Now, women who don't want surgery have an option. A non-surgical method called the Brava Breast Enhancement and Shaping System is reported to increase a woman's breasts by about one cup size when worn for ten hours a day for ten weeks. The device, reviewed and permitted for sale by the FDA, consists of two sets of clear domes connected to a controller, called a SmartBox, that is held in place by a specially designed sports bra. The device applies sustained gentle tension or pull to the breast tissue resulting in growth. Doctors have used this process, known as tissue expansion, for over 30 years to grow skin, bone and muscle. Women using the system report that it is painless and effective.

Sue, after having breast-fed two children, lost fullness in her breasts, which she was able to regain after using Brava. She now says they are like they were before. Women who used the Brava System in clinical trials obtained an increase of 100cc or more, which typically amounts to about a one cup size increase.

A clinically proven, non-surgical method to naturally increase breast size is gaining attention.

Says Sue, "I only wanted a little more of what I already had. What was important to me was it is my own breast tissue, and that it did not involve taking pills or surgery. I'm thrilled!"

Dr. Roger K. Khouri, a reconstructive plastic surgeon and inventor of the Brava System, explains: "Women who use the Brava System can expect a modest increase in growth that will not only be their own breast tissue, but will follow the contours of their own body." Studies show that two years after completing the ten-week program, women have maintained the increase in their breast size.

The Brava System is only available through authorized physicians and costs approximately $2,250. It is recommended for women whose breast size range from an AA to a B cup. To learn more about Brava and the science behind it, log on to www.mybrava.com or call 1-800-407-5304.
