Florida Rich In Charm

(NAPS)—Seasoned travelers know that where you stay may be as important as where you go. That's one reason seasoned travelers prefer the Bradenton area of Florida. The area is known for its beautiful scenery, but also for its appealing places to stay.

Florida's Gulf Islands of Anna Maria and Longboat Key—the Bradenton Area—have a variety of lodgings. Anna Maria is unique in that there are no fast food restaurants and no major resort properties, only charming small properties. Longboat Key has some full service resorts plus a choice of rental houses, condos and seaside inns and cottages.

Many of these accommodations are part of the National Superior Small Lodgings program, which inspects small properties for cleanliness, maintenance and service and are indicated in the area's Web site and in the visitor's guides.

This is good news for people traveling to the area for the warm sun, the miles of white sand beaches, the fishing and golf opportunities and the shopping.
