Finding Free Advice For Home Improvements

(NAPSA)—If you're looking to improve the look of your home, a little free advice may go a long way. An excellent place to begin is with recommendations from friends and family who have completed projects similar to the one you are considering. However, if no one in your circle has ever completed a project like yours, who can you ask?

When considering a major remodeling project, it helps to learn from the advice of people with years of experience. These people will likely know the questions to ask that can help you create your dream room—and avoid the nightmares many people experience when remodeling without the proper preparation.

The Value of Advice

Adding living space to your home is an investment that can provide you and your family with years of pleasure and enjoyment, but an important key to the entire process is planning. To help you navigate the sometimes unfamiliar waters of renovations, a company with more than 30 years of experience building room additions has created a free guide. Four Seasons Sunrooms' "Essential Guide to Sunrooms" was designed to help you through the renovation process by providing real-world information the company has compiled during its 30 years of experience building sunrooms around the world.

From planning where on your property to locate your new sunroom, to deciding the size, shape and materials of your new room, the guide can help you through the issues you'll need to consider as you plan your new dream room, including:

- How will you use the room?
- How will you decorate the room?
- What materials should you use?
- What kind of maintenance will the room require?
- How do you make sure that the company you hire will do a good job?

"The guide helped break the process [of renovating] down into small, simple steps," said Susan DeAngelis of New York. DeAngelis had experienced a good deal of apprehension about her home's renovations previous to seeking advice. "It really helped take the fear out of the entire process."
