

Keeping Kids Safe Online

(NAPSA)—Your parents always insisted on knowing your friends. Now that your children may have friends they never see, knowing whom they're talking to is more important than ever—especially while on a computer and connected to the Internet.

As a parent, it's not always possible to keep an eye on your kids. Now there's a Web-based service, choozmail, that can monitor them when they are online and warn you of any suspicious activity—anyplace, anytime. It provides parents peace of mind when at work, traveling or just relaxing.

Internet Tools

This service provides fundamental tools such as e-mail and chat in a way that protects your children from dangerous predators, cyber bullies and even identity thieves who might otherwise pose a threat to you and your family. It allows both kids and parents to experience the Internet without worry or shame.

A helpful setup wizard shows you in great detail the steps you need to take to protect your loved ones. When you administer your family's e-mail accounts, you can be in total control. With rules-based parental control, you as a parent get to decide what e-mails your children receive. And if you have children of different ages, these rules can be tailored to suit the age and maturity of each child as you see fit.

The service also gives you control over what Web sites they visit and lets you see whom they're chatting with and even what they're saying. It can even notify you, regardless of your location, when any of your kids communicate with an individual for the very first time. Ordinarily, you discourage your children from talking to strangers. choozmail's features offer parents an additional layer of security by providing tools that can make their children's Internet experiences more pleasant and family-oriented.

Spam Protection

In addition, choozmail offers a powerful anti-spam routine that gives you peace of mind that your family will not be bothered with unsolicited, electronically-generated e-mails—no more “special offers” and inappropriate messages.

It's easy to set up this service to receive all your family's e-mail—including your work account; all anti-spam and parental control rules may also be applied to all incoming e-mails; this way, your family is always protected.
