Networking Works

(NAPSA)—Networking with professional colleagues, friends and family members is always a good idea but can be especially helpful when looking for a job. However in a difficult job market friends and family may also be out of work or worried they may be laid off. Fortunately, another kind of network may be able to help.

A toll-free helpline makes it easier to look for work, even in a difficult economy.

America's Workforce Network is a toll-free helpline that plugs job seekers into nearby career resources. The helpline is a free, useful and easy-to-use tool for achieving access to federal, state, and local workforce development services.

The helpline's customer service representatives can provide basic information about laid-off worker assistance as well as local numbers to call for job training programs, unemployment insurance and much much more.

The helpline's customer service representatives can provide basic information about laid-off worker assistance and where to call to file for unemployment insurance. They also have information to share about job search assistance and job re-training.

The helpline can be reached at 1-877-US-2JOBS (1-877-872-5627) and is also TTY accessible at 1-877-889-5627. Hours of operation are from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. Eastern Time, Monday through Friday.
