Romance Meets Reality In New Page-Turners

(NAPSA)—A publisher has turned the page on established styles of romance novels to create something new—the reality-based romance™ novel. The books take the stories of actual couples and romanticize them. Now, it's inviting the public to take part in the launch of the first title.

Free Sneak Previews

To celebrate the birth of its new series, the publisher, HCI Books, is giving readers the opportunity to preview this new subgenre before the books hit the store shelves.

Readers can preview the first novels in the series—called “True Vows”—before they are officially launched into the marketplace. This sneak preview is more than just a few paragraphs from the first chapter.

Readers will be given access to five chapters for free. They'll be able to meet the characters, get introduced to their story and join them in their real-life romantic drama. The first book in the series, “Meet Me In Manhattan,” by Judith Arnold, tells the story of high-school sweethearts who meet again after 15 years and try to rekindle the spark they once felt.

Subsequent books in the series include “Hard To Hold” by USA Today best-selling author Julie Leto and Alison Kent’s “The Icing On The Cake,” in which the heroine learns about having her cake and eating it, too.

To access the free chapters each week from August 8 to September 18, go to <http://vows.hci-books.com/true-vows-free-chapters>.
