Site Helps Take “Pane” Out Of Window Decoration

(NAPS)—From creating color schemes to making lighting plans, the Internet is quickly making home design a virtual breeze. Web sites now provide decorating tips and products to help users dress up their homes.

For example, one such site, WindowConnection.com, offers users a complete line of custom window treatments and decorating choices for almost any room. The site lets users browse by product lines and features and access window decorating tips for specific types of rooms.

An industry first, the site also provides in-home delivery and professional installation services. In addition, visitors can find advice on the best ways to measure windows and can create an online work area for gathering and storing project information.

The site offers products ranging from cellular, pleated and roman shades to wood alloy, mini and vertical blinds as well as sheer window shadings and specialty products.

Customers shopping at this site are led through a convenient step-by-step ordering process.

After customers enter information regarding product type, color and size, the shade or blind requested is created online for their approval. An order summary is continuously updated and lets customers check order specifications and cost at any time.

selected and an appointment is set up. The dealer verifies the order with the customer and remeasures if there is any doubt about the dimensions provided. Finally, the dealer schedules an appointment with the customer to deliver and install the shades or blinds.

Before ordering, customers can request kits containing samples of the shades and blinds sold at the site, to help them make their decorating decisions. The kits include a $10 coupon, good toward a future order.
