

MAKING FAMILY LIFE MORE FUN

Video Games Parents And Kids Agree On

(NAPSA)—With hundreds of titles on the market these days, finding video games that are safe and appropriate as well as fun for their kids to play can be confusing for parents. Luckily, there are helpful resources on the Internet that can make these decisions as easy as child's play.

For example, a reputable Web site devoted to family fun has set up a program to provide parents with the information that is most relevant to them.

To help parents eliminate much of the guesswork involved when purchasing video games for their children, the Video Game of the Year awards program at FamilyFun.com (www.familyfun.com) recognizes games that are suitable for youngsters. But what good is a video game if your kids aren't playing it? The second part of the program focuses on the fun and playability factors. That's because children as well as parents are involved in all stages of the evaluation. They test factors such as fun, playability as well as value and age appropriateness. And the online reviews are available year-round for access anytime parents and kids are shopping for games.

The awards showcase games rated E and E10+ and include reviews from both parents and kids with detailed information about each game to help you make the right choice.

Now it's easy to find wholesome video games kids will love.

These awards are divided into handheld and console categories, in addition to age subcategories for games suitable for 6 to 9 year olds and 10 to 12 year olds.

A sister program to FamilyFun magazine's renowned T.O.Y. Awards, the Video Game of the Year prize is awarded by FamilyFun.com. Last year's top honors were taken by THQ's "Power Rangers: Dino Thunder" and Activision's "Shrek 2."

Produced by Disney Online, FamilyFun.com is the premier online family resource for creative solutions, that combine award-winning content and related community features focused on great ideas, practical advice and "fun stuff to do."
