What's Hot, What's Not

(NAPSA)—Wireless phones and services have come a long way since their introduction in the early 1980s. From the newest phones to games to Web access to short text messaging and the special “language” that accompanies it, wireless phones are today’s way of making a statement. As the industry evolves, Verizon Wireless has compiled a list of what’s hot and what’s not today.

What's Hot	What's Not
1. Short text messaging	1. Passing paper notes
2. Wireless phone and FM radio combined	2. Carrying two devices
3. Fashionable headsets in cool colors	3. Holding the phone to your ear
4. Prepaid wireless phone service	4. Pay phones
5. Translucent color face plates	5. Neon phone wraps
6. Chrome and silver phones	6. Plain black phones
7. Reliable nationwide service	7. Dropped calls
8. Voicemail for your wireless phone	8. Missed calls
9. Playing games on a phone	9. Playing games at the arcade
10. Stock alerts on your wireless phone	10. Not knowing your stock just tanked

This list can be helpful when buying the gift of wireless for others. Another great way to learn about the latest in wireless is to visit the wireless service providers’ Web sites. For example, national service provider Verizon Wireless has up-to-the-minute information about the newest wireless products and services available at www.VerizonWireless.com and ordering online includes free shipping.

While visiting, check out the hottest phones, calling plans and digital network features and learn about Verizon Wireless’ Worry Free Guarantee, which gives customers five reasons not to worry about their wireless phone service.
