

Windows That Offer Comfort And Savings

(NAPSA)—Installing high-performance windows can mean more comfort and convenience—as well as savings when it comes to energy bills and taxes.

The American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA) provides a tax credit of 30 percent of the cost of qualifying windows up to $1,500.

To qualify for the ARRA tax credit, which expires at the end of 2010, windows must meet certain requirements. Check with your window provider or the IRS to confirm eligibility.

The federal government's tax credit on high-performance windows can add to a homeowner's energy savings.

To maximize energy savings, look for high-performance models labeled as Envirosealed Windows. These windows use nonmetal spacers that offer the warmest edge of glass temperature for a more comfortable home interior.

Experts say triple-pane windows with low-emissivity (low-e) glass, insulated frames and argon or krypton gas filling provide the best performance.

For more information, visit www.EnvirosealedWindows.com.